Adam Eidson was honored as the January 2018 SEA Employee of the Month at a presentation in front of his peers in the Office of Analysis, Assessment and Accreditation (AAA). Adam serves as a Programmer/Analyst for AAA and has made a positive impact on the services they provide. In an excerpt from his nomination letter, "Adam has been working in our office for a couple years now and he hit the ground running. Bringing a robust combination of skills in database development and administration, programming, and customer service, Adam has quickly proven himself to be an indispensable member of the AAA team. Thanks to Adam's excellent work in designing and building a new database for AAA, we can perform more complex analyses and create more detailed data visualizations that inform important decision making at the highest levels, empower faculty, staff, and students to more easily understand institutional data, and ultimately benefit the entire university."

Thanks for your service Adam, and congratulations on a well-deserved honor! He is now entered in the running for the SEA Employee of the Year.
